

A Day at the Beach

By Jan Chronister

She leaves it all behind, threatens the beach with her presence.
Plans to fill her journal with poems, gets lost in stories told by rocks, how worn wood talks.

Sand roots her feet,
waves wash away bird tracks, pine cones burst in heat.

She trudges home, stencils the walls with words that burn in the dark.